Develop compliance messages that get employees' attention

By Brian K. Lee and Dian Zhang

Brian K. Lee (brian.k.lee@gartner.com) is a Managing Vice President and Dian Zhang (dian.zhang@gartner.com) is a Research Specialist at Gartner in Arlington, Virginia, USA.

In today's workplace, employees receive information in many ways. Gartner research finds that three-quarters of them report that the way they communicate and consume information has changed compared to just three years ago. If your compliance messages don't stand out from the crowd, they may never be consumed by busy employees.

This is no easy task, especially with limited resources. Gartner research indicates that in 2018, the average compliance team allocated only 6% of its annual budget to communications, down from 7% in 2017.
