

Compliance Today - September 2019 FDA releases medical device incident reports

On June 24, 2019, International Consortium of Investigative Journalists reported on their website, “For two decades, the regulator charged with overseeing medical device safety in the United States allowed manufacturers to conceal from public view serious injuries and other malfunctions associated with implants and other medical products, from breast implants to surgical staplers.”

This document is only available to members. Please log in or become a member.

Become a Member Login