

Report on Supply Chain Compliance Volume 2, Number 23. December 12, 2019 Trucking association files lawsuit protesting California gig economy law

By Sascha Matuszak

On November 12, 2019, the California Trucking Association filed a suit challenging the sweeping new law, on the grounds that such a law would deprive employees of the right to choose employment as employees or as contractors. The law, “sets a new, three-prong test for companies to use when determining how to classify their workers. To be labeled a contractor, a worker must be free from control of the company; performing work ‘outside the usual course of the hiring entity’s business; and engaged in an independently established trade, occupation or business of the same nature as the work they are performing.”^[1]

This document is only available to subscribers. Please log in or purchase access.

Purchase Login