

Corporate Compliance Forms and Tools Compliance Program Risk Catalog and Assessment

The following is a general— not exclusive—list of potential compliance risk areas that an organization may face. Choose a likelihood (L) and impact (I) scale (e.g., 1–5 or 1–10) and calculate total inherent risk (L times I) based on input received from subject matter experts and interviews with different portions of your organization.

Assess the effectiveness of your controls (E) using the same numeric scale you chose for likelihood and impact, again based on input from subject matter experts and interviews with different business functions, and then subtract the effectiveness (E) from the inherent risk to determine your residual risk (R) for each risk event.

You can then use a heat map or other visual scale to depict the top risks for your organization. You may decide to conduct this assessment on an enterprise basis, a regional basis, a department or business unit basis, a country-level basis etc. It may be conducted annually, biannually, on a quarterly basis, or some other cadence. Choose the scope and cadence that best suits the needs of your organization.
