Tackling new provider compliance training

By Donnetta Horseman

New providers are a unique audience that often get overlooked when it comes to compliance training. Connecting with them for provider-specific training can be challenging. Here are a few tips.

Connect with the right offices

Reach out to your faculty affairs or medical staff offices to see if you can get time on their orientation schedules. These areas usually have dedicated material and sessions outside of general new employee orientation where you can cover provider-specific compliance training.
