2024 represents the 25th anniversary of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) Convention on Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials, which has now been signed by 46 countries—including eight that aren't OECD members.^[1] I recently returned from the OECD's annual Global Anti-Corruption & Integrity Forum held in Paris and, as expected, several of the sessions reflected on this 25-year mark. The overwhelming impression from panelists and audience members alike was that implementation of the convention has indeed made significant progress in the fight against corruption.
